

The McWhiney Communications Studio

The McWhiney Communications Studio, based out of the Learning Commons area of McMurry University's Jay-Rollins Library, focuses on the recording and editing of video content for the History Department. Equipped with video recording and editing equipment, the studio provides digital products and videos for online classes. The staff currently is student-led and supervised by a student employee of the McWhiney Group, the non-profit organization operating in that space. Together, these scholars learn the process of creating working commercial and educational video products. Through the McWhiney History Education Group, the students provide content for the Diogenes' Lantern website an online initiative that provides autonomous history courses for students around the world.
